

Journalists Celebrate World Press Freedom Day

3 May is celebrated annually, more commonly known as World Press Freedom Day, the day focuses on the essential principles of press freedom. This year, 2017, the World Press Freedom Day theme is; Critical Minds for Critical Times: Media's role in advancing peaceful, just and inclusive societies Veteran Journalist, Anna Nicodemus says she believes journalism is a calling.

"When I hear of fellow journalists being executed and persecuted for the truth, I count myself fortunate to be operating in a country which tops the global press freedom charts for Africa, and is ranked 17th in the world."

Nicodemus has been in the broadcast trade for many years, and relays how she never experienced hatred, violence or discrimination towards her as a journalist. She admits to having experienced the occasional bureaucratic bullying, but generally she practices her passion without fear or favour.

Nicodemus reckons that Namibian journalists are generally free to report on important issues which impact our societies in general and Namibia as a country as a whole.
